

January 22, 1752.

LONDON, September 5.

SOME time ago the following odd affair happened at Bedlam: Some patients, to the number of ten, who were suffered to walk about the house, being in the kitchen one morning when the doctor was there, complained to him of the badness of their broth, and told him they were determined not to suffer it any longer, for, as the cook was out of the way, they would rectify it themselves; and immediately laid hold of him, and were going to put him into the boiling cupper; which the doctor happily thought of an expedient to delay a little: He told them his cloaths would spoil the broth, and desired leave to stir; which they agreed to: And he accordingly was reduced to his breeches and shirt, when somebody luckily knocked at the door, which they had fastened: The doctor called out and told them they could not come in, for he was undressing to get into the cupper. Imagining that something extraordinary was the occasion of the doctor's being fastened, they immediately cry'd out fire; at which the madmen were so terrified, that they opened the door, and ran with great precipitation up-stairs: By which means the doctor escaped being boil'd.
